Vande Bharat Mission

Vande Bharat Mission is the world's largest expatriation exercise to bring back stranded Indians from foreign destinations. With the spread of Coronavirus worldwide, the countries instilled their own lockdowns and put travel restrictions into place. In response, many nations evacuated their citizens as well as other nationals and brought them home. India was no exception: to control the COVID-19 pandemic in the country, all visas were suspended from 13 March and international flights were suspended. The Indian government initiated a massive evacuation program called "Vande Bharat Mission" on May 7, 2020. This involved flights via Air India and its low-cost arm Air India Express. In the first three phases of the mission, the government did not allow private airlines to participate, though they have been allowed to participate in the fourth phase onwards. The government continues to set the fare, determine the routes and decide the number of flights. While evacuating Indian nationals back to the country, certain flights also evacuated anyone who wanted to leave, provided they were a national, permanent resident, or had a visa valid for at least one year. Unlike previous evacuations, passengers have to pay for their journey, with fares ranging from ₹15,000 (US$210) for the Gulf states to ₹100,000 (US$1,400) for the USA. Till 6 September, over 15,00,000 stranded Indians had been repatriated through various means under #VandeBharat Mission.
